Think Twice: Exploring Who and What Lies Behind Everyday Products and Their Supply Chains

UCSB’s Global Poverty Action Day will feature a panel discussion exploring global supply chains, with a focus on how students can help drive change in how everyday products are made and consumed. The panelists will include Dr. Richard Appelbaum (Professor Emeritus of Sociology and Global Studies, UCSB), Dr. Nelson Lichtenstein (Professor of History, UCSB), Ian Bentley (co-founder and CEO of Parker Clay), and Aditi Mayer (sustainable fashion blogger, and UCI student). Join us April 19th @ 4:30PM in TD-W 1701 (Theater and Dance Building West).

Visual displays will also be placed around campus with surprising statistics on how your phone and clothing are made, in addition to student-led classroom discussions earlier in the week, to explore these issues in more depth.

Learn more by visiting: http://www.orfaleacenter.ucsb.edu/blum

The Blum Federation is a UC-wide initiative focused on alleviating local and global poverty through research, education and public service. The Blum Federation is organizing Global Poverty Action Day on April 19th, with student-led events across many UC campuses focused on themes related to poverty alleviation, equity and social justice, locally and abroad. At UCSB, GPAD is also supported by the Orfalea Center for Global @ International Studies, and is part of “Humxn Rights Week”, organized by UCSB’s Human Rights Board.